I was very close to my father so I have always wanted to follow his footsteps and become an architect. However, as I grew older, I realized that I wanted to accomplish something unique that did not rely on my family's assistance, therefore I am studying Chinese to support my future. I chose IT as my major for my cousin and uncle are IT postgraduate student in Singapore and the manager of Mobifone, they have many experiences and illuminated my interest as well as my curiosity in this subject. I get a lot of guidance and support from them, therefore I want to enter this profession to research and practice coding. Since we are in the era of 4.0, this major is in great demand and offers many prospects for a successful career.

- Team profile: According to the exam, I am not only a motivated person who appreciates working in a group, but I am also willing to speak and listen to others in order to settle issues and be accountable for my work. My teammates are quite relaxed; they are all entertainers who offer delight to the others, and we rarely have conflicts. However, because Hung is afraid of criticism, we must avoid putting pressure on him by just providing advice and support. Furthermore, my teammates are highly creative and assertive in making decisions, which may come in handy as we strive to come up with an idea.

- Ideal Jobs: My ideal job in my team is pretty identical to Hung's; we both want to work for large corporations in the apps and web development fields. It interests me since I can design many beneficial technologies to assist people improve their lives and experiences through applications and websites. On the other hand, two of my other team members are aiming for positions in the company such as UI/UX Design and Front-end Development. All of those occupations require a solid bachelor's degree and 2 to 3 years of experience in those fields. Thus, we all have the same aim of graduating from RMIT with a good bachelor's degree and gaining as much experience as possible in order to achieve our goals and become qualified for the jobs we want.
